Diner Agency: Current Strategy Toward Talent

Diner Agency is an international influencer and talent agency operating across Canada and the US. Its strategy centers on facilitating authentic brand-creator partnerships through a combination of

- Relationship-first approach: Long-term partnerships, not transactional gigs
- Inclusive, warm brand voice: “You matter. Let’s talk.”
- End-to-end creator care: From onboarding to debrief, with contracts & compliance
- Values-led selection: Diverse creators prioritized over follower counts
- Outreach via: Word of mouth, Instagram, talent referrals, and creator community events

Diner's UK Talent Approach

Warm and Inclusive Branding

Focus on emotional warmth and inclusivity to preserve the brand's unique personality and appeal among UK audiences.

Localized Communication Style

Adopt a subtle, collaborative, and humble tone, reflecting the preferences of UK creators for genuine interactions.

Platform and Community Engagement

Prioritize platforms like Instagram, TikTok, YouTube Shorts, and Discord while strengthening presence at UK events and supporting micro-talent.

London and Northern England Markets

London Market

- Established Influencer Agencies

Questions/Feedback?

Story Board - Scene 1: Establishing the Scene

Dialogue:
Chloe (concerned): "Gemma, I'm genuinely worried. My engagement is great across both YouTube and TikTok, but... where are the real brand partners? The quality of the offers is so low."

(Duration: 6 seconds)
We open with a slow, cinematic dolly-in shot of a charming, vintage London diner ("The Full English") on a rainy afternoon. The windows are streak-swept, highlighting the warm, inviting light inside. Our two protagonists, Chloe (in her smart blazer) and Gemma (in her signature colorful sweater), are seated at a window table near their influencer setup (tripod, lens). Their expression is troubled and slightly frustrated. A classic teapot sits on the table; through the window, a brief glimpse of a red double-decker bus confirms the UK location.

Story Board - Scene 2: The Core Problem

Dialogue:
Chloe (frustrated): "Ugh! Another one. Automated systems. Look at this—emails for crypto, random power tools... it's all generic posts, not partnerships. I want real, curated connections!"

(Duration: 8 seconds)
We transition to a medium shot of Chloe (smart blazer) inside her busy but professional home office and studio setup (consistent with Panel 2). Exasperation is on her face. She holds up her tablet, scrolling through her email inbox. A close-up view of the tablet screen is clearly visible, showing a series of subject lines like "automated outreach" and "mass collaboration request," exactly as described in the details: "They just see raw numbers and send these generic, impersonal pitches for crypto or power tools. They have zero strategic understanding of my beauty and wellness audience!"

Story Board - Scene 3: The Call for Strategy

Dialogue:
Gemma (emphatic): "Exactly! It's the automated systems. That's why you need to bypass them. You need a dedicated, people-first management agency that uses direct, relationship-driven outreach to find your perfect brand partners."

(Duration: 6 seconds)
Back to the cozy 'Full English' diner. We see a tight close-up shot of Gemma (colorful striped sweater), looking sincere and passionate as she addresses Chloe (out of frame). She emphasizes her point with assertive hand gestures as she holds her teacup, which she pauses to sip thought-fully from, reinforcing the UK context and making her advice feel intimate and personal. The background is blurred bokeh, drawing focus to her advice.

Story Board - Scene 4: A Ray of Hope

Dialogue:
James (the Waiter): "Pardon the interruption, ladies, but I couldn't help but overhear your conversation. Many creators who visit us feel that way. We actually know an excellent, locally-facing agency."

(Duration: 5 seconds)
Back to the diner environment, perspective from the table. James, the charming waiter in his professional waistcoat and bowtie, approaches the table. The focus is on him as he approaches, looking reliable and polite. His expression is respectful and polite as he makes direct eye contact with Chloe. Both friends look up at him, Chloe with mild surprise and Gemma with attention.

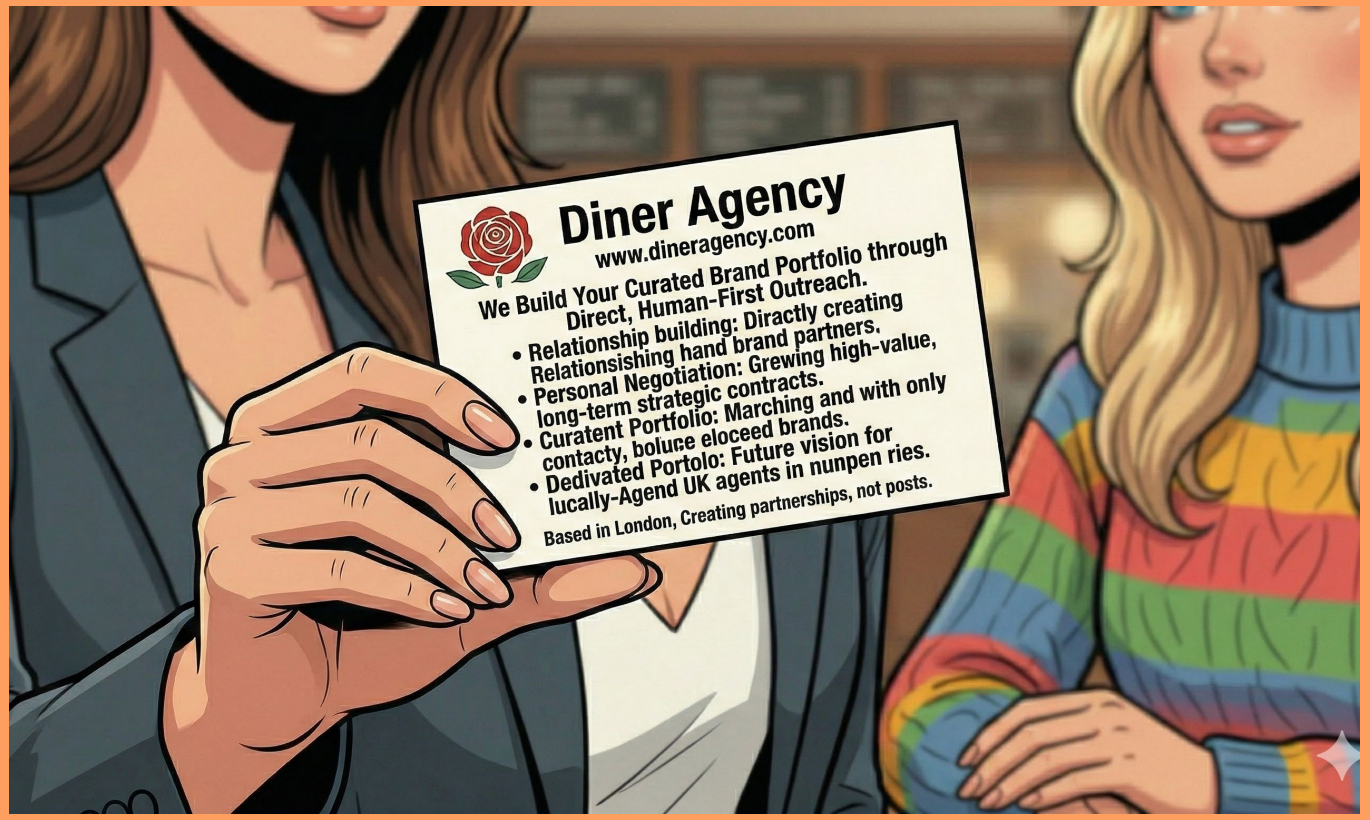

Story Board - Scene 5: The Introduction

Dialogue:
James: "This London-based team focuses only on relationship marketing. They build direct, human-to-human partnerships that go deeper than posts. They aren't an algorithm game; they are personal. They are Diner Agency."

(Duration: 4 seconds)
An over-the-shoulder shot from Chloe's perspective. James (the waiter) makes direct eye contact with Chloe as his hand, holding the sleek business card exactly, is extending towards her. The composition emphasizes the simple gesture of discreet introduction.

Story Board - Scene 6: The Resolution

Dialogue:

- Chloe (excited): "Wait... curated brand portfolio? Direct outreach? Gemma, this is perfect! This is exactly how they connect people to real businesses!"
- Gemma: "I told you! You need a human-first agent!"
- Narrator (V.O., concluding): "Diner Agency: Creating partnerships, not posts."

(Duration: 9 seconds)

An extreme close-up view of the Diner Agency business card held by Chloe's manicured hand and Gemma's colorful striped sleeve. The details are perfectly in focus and verbatim to the card shown in the original storyboard. Every bullet point and line of text is clear: The title "Strategic Management for UK Creators," followed by the specific services: "Direct Relationship Building," "Personal Negotiation," and "Curated Portfolio."
